Peek Inside the Book

Each day had the same bloody rhythm: mortars at dawn, car bombs by 11: 00 a.m., drive-by shootings before tea, and mortars again at dusk. At night the death squads went to work. Richard Engel, And Then All Hell Broke Loose: Two Decades in the Middle East //

We were meat to be bought and sold. Speaking Arabic made me a curious and unusual product. I didnt want to be special. I didnt want them to be curious about me....

Reader's Opinions

I doubt I am the only person who is totally confused by the Middle East. Between different religious beliefs, tribal disputes and politics, it sure is an area ripe for turmoil. The little snippets of information we get on the evening news, in newspapers or online do little to help the average person understand all the...
